Complete Sentences

Since a fragment is only part of a sentence and does not express a complete thought, it is important that we know how to fix fragments to make them complete sentences. To make a fragment a complete sentence, you will need to answer the question the fragment left you with. Using the worksheet and your answers on page 31, you will add to each fragment to make complete sentences.

Directions: Using what you have learned in previous lessons, make each of the following fragments complete sentences. A few examples have been done for you. Note: There are many ways you can make a sentence complete. Sometimes you will add to the end of the fragment; sometimes you will add to the beginning. As long as you answer the question the fragment left you with, you will have a complete sentence!

Examples:

After he left for school he realized that he forgot his backpack.

The baby cried when he spilled milk on the table.
